

April is

National Minority Health Month

environmental, social & economic conditions impact health

Bridging Health Equity Across Communities

Throughout the month of April, the Florida Department of Health's Office of Minority Health and Health Equity will join with our community partners in an effort to help raise public awareness on issues impacting health disparities and health equity in Florida. The goal is to address the environmental, social and economic factors which are recognized as the social determinants of health. They include housing, education, transportation, justice and employment disparities.

The conditions in the places where people are born, grow, live, work, play, learn and age have significant impact on the health outcomes of individuals, families and their communities. This is a compassionate call to action, and an opportunity to unite and work together towards the common goal of improving the health of all people within our respective communities.

Learn more: www.floridahealth.gov/programs-and-services/minority-health/minority-health-month

